Vance to visit Israel, Egypt on eve of talks

U.S. Secretary of State Cyrus Vance's participation in the handingback ceremonies at El-Arish later this month will be broadened into a full-scale political visit by the secretary to Egypt and Israel on the eve of the autonomy talks. American Ambassador Samuel Lewis met with Premier Menahem Begin yesterday to prepare the secretary's schedule in Jerusalem. Vance will also hold talks with Egyptian President Anwar Sadat and his top aides in Cairo.

It is not yet clear to what extent the secretary's visit at that juncture will represent an American involvement in the autonomy talks right from their outset. U.S. President Jimmy Carter has pledged an active envoy he appointed. Robert Strauss, has planned to make his personal debut only later in the summer. Under the terms of the peace treaty package, the autonomy talks are to be concluded within one year. According to U.S. sources, Lewis also discussed with Begin the military and political situation in Lebanon Israeli sources denied that the envoy had transmitted a formal U.S. expression of concern over Israeli bombings in Lebanon. State Department spokesman Hodding Carter voiced this concern at his briefing vesterday. (See separate

Cairo: No immediate air link

Post Diplomatic Correspondent and agencles

Jerusalem was not perturbed last night by Egypt's announcement earlier in the day that it would not agree to the establishment of an air link with Israel except 15 months from the date the two countries exchanged documents ratifying the peace treaty.

A government spokesman, in a statement distributed by the Middle East News Agency, said: "The basic position of the Arab Republic of Egypt is that the normalization of relations with Israel will begin nine months after the exchange of documents ratifying the peace

"The air link will not be established except six months after the normalization of relations," the spokesman said.

In Jerusalem, officials responsible for the process of normalization with Egypt assumed the statement meant that regular air tourist traffic would not begin between the two countries until a commercial air transport accord bad been concluded. Responsible Israeli officials have been pointing out for some time now that Egypt does not propose to be rushed into a full normalization of ties with Israel, but intends to let the process charted in the peace treaty and its annexes take its steady and unhurried course. These officials feel that the public in Israel, after some initial misunderstandings and exaggerated expectations of almost immediate trade and tourism possibilities, is now beginning to appreciate that the process will be slow and careful

The officials believe that Egypt's statement yesterday does not contradict Premier Menahem Begin's repeated assertion that he and President Anwar Sadat will inaugurate a direct Cairo-Tel Aviv air corridor on May 28 by flying through it together aboard Sadat's presidential plane. The corridor will indeed be inaugurated in this way, but, as previously explained in The Jerusalem Post, it will serve initially only for official flights and the small number of officially-invited groups expected to travel in each direction until, eventually, mass tourism is arranged for.

Egypt boycotts Islam Conference

CAIRO (UPI). - Egypt decided yesterday not to send a delegation to the Islamic Conference opening in Morocco today, as its call for a summit of Moslem heads of state was apparently turned down, officials said.

Youssef Karim, an envoy sent from the Jadda-based conference left Cairo yesterday carrying two letters, one stressing the Egyptian position that a summit must take place to "liberate" Old Jerusalem from Israeli occupation.

The other letter, written in response to a message from congreas secretary-general Ahmed Karim Jay, explained that the Egyptian-Israeli peace treaty signed last March "conforms with all the resolutions adopted by previous Islamic and Arab conferences and summits." sources said.

Karim's talks with Deputy Prime Minister Hassan el-Tohamy, who was supposed to head the Egyptian delegation to the ministerial con-ference, collapsed because of the Egyptian insistence on convening the summit as a precondition for Egypt's participation in the conference, diplomatic sources said.

Beirut rejects Begin's call for peace talks

Post Mideast Affairs Editor and Agencies

Lebanon last night firmly rejected Prime Minister Menahem Begin's invitation for peace talks and ac-cused Israel of committing "barbaric aggression" against its territory. Prime Minister Selim al-Hoss, in a lengthy statement broadcast by the state-run Beirut radio, said continuing Israeli attacks on Lebanon represented blackmail in its ugliest

"Begin's call for Lebanon to conchude a peace treaty with Israel is amazing." Hoss said. "It comes after barbaric Israeli aggression against Lebanese territory...the aim of this aggression is blackmail in its ugliest form." But a favourable response was expected today by Christian leaders now threatening to declare independence from the central govern-

Observers in Beirut noted earlier that the presence of 25,000 Syrian troops in central and northern Lebanon made a positive response by Beirut to the Begin peace proposition most unlikely. The observers pointed out that the government of President Sarkis had just cutt off diplomatic ties with Egypt for making peace with Israel. Sarkis is currently marking the eve of the third anniversary of his presidency, which he assumed with Syrian support at the height of the 1976 civil war. Problems confronting him now include a mounting Christian resistance to the Syrian presence, a bloody vendetta between rival Christian factions, and defiance of his government by the Palestine Liberation Organization currently isopardizing stability in North Lebanon

The secretary-general of the powerful National Liberal Party, Dory Chamoun, yesterday said that Christian militia leaders may follow the example of the Southern Lebanese dissident commander, Major Sa'ad Haddad, in declaring their regions independent of Sarkis government.

In an interview with Beirut's "Al-Ahrar'' daily, Dory Chamoun, son of former President Camille Chamoun. said that Christians could no longer tolerate what he termed "the law of the jungle" in Lebanon.

Chamoun said his party would prefer to cooperate with the central government "but should this prove to be impossible" due to Sarkis' weakness "then imposing our own authority becomes inevitable." He was specifically referring to declaring "free wilayat" (autonomous regions) in Mount Lebanon, a strategic hilly area overlooking Beirut and the rest of Lebanon.

Christian militia leaders have been urging the central government to make two drastic moves: one to end Syrian military presence and the other to contain the PLO, whose terrorist activities recently led to mounting Israeli retaliations into Lebanon.

In Cairo, the Egyptian minister of state for foreign affairs, Butros Ghali, said that his government has called on the U.S. to intervene 'firmly" with Israel to halt its retaliatory attacks in Lebanon.

Ghali said he contacted U.S. Ambassador Hermann Eilts yesterday morning to tell him that the Israeli actions "expose the area to dangers for which Israel must bear the con-

Civilian economic experts join El-Arish transfer talks

Israeli and Egyptian negotiators yesterday met for the second day in El-Arish to plan the town's forthcoming return to Egyptian rule. Teams from the two countries were expected today to begin demarcating the new border that is to become effective on May 25, when Israel returns the Northern Sinai coastal strip that includes El-Arish. Civilian economic officials from both countries joined the talks

By Joshua Brilliant

Jerusalem Post Reporter

TEL AVIV. - The Civil Servants Union yesterday unanimously decided to end its three-day strike tonight as scheduled, but threatened "farreaching measures" in the future to force the government to yield to its wage demands.

In a 31/4-hour meeting described by one participant as "a tough confrontation between hawks and doves," the majority of the union turned down suggestions to continue the strike, to start selective job active sanctions tomorrow, and to shut all TV and radio broadcasts. A big majority also rejected a proposal to return to work today as a good-will gesture towards the government. Union chairman Reuven Ben-Ami told The Jerusalem Post the leaders of the 40,000 striking civil servants will meet on Sunday to decide on future measures if the government does not come forward. He declined to say what steps are planned so as not to give the government a chance to prepare counter measures. Union leaders sounded conciliatory

Peres devoted a good deal of his speech to various episodes in the history of the past 30 years, apparently spurred to do this because of Begin's recent questioning of Labour historiography ascribing to Ben-Gurion the exclusive, or almost exclusive credit, for the establishment of the state in May 1948. IDF hitchhikes: chopper fails after delivering Navon went without a hitch He met with the chief of staff, Rav-Aluf Rafael Eitan, and the head of the IDF's manpower division, Aluf Moshe Nativ. He then visited an army base where soldiers are taking part in a special educational programme, in addition to their regular military training.

President Yitzhak Navon's visit to the Israel Defence Forces yesterday

The senior officers who escorted the president took leave of him at the helipad in Jerusalem's Kiryat Ben-Gurion government quarter, and watched his black limousine drive off to Beit Hanassi and home.

Then they mounted the helicopter for the flight back to Halfa. The pilot pressed the starter. No response. The rotor motor refused to work after repeated tries.

The officers, plus one of the crew, walked sorry-faced over to the Knesset building and told their story. They were last heard trying to cadge

Two Kiryat Arba men held in Halhoul killing, vine uprooting

By IAN BLACK

Jerusalem Post Reporter Two Kirvat Arba men were arrested yesterday as police continued their inquiries into the uprooting of vines on Ja'abari Hill in Hebron two weeks ago and the fatal shooting of two young Arab demonstrators in Halhoul in March.

These are the first arrests made in connection with both incidents, which have set tempers flaring in the West Bank and increased tension between Hebron's Arab population and the Jewish community in Kiryat

Well-informed sources told The Jerusalem Post last night that both men are leading figures in the Kach movement of former Jewish Defence League leader Meir Kahane,

It was reported on Sunday that the investigation into the deaths of the two Arab high school students in Halhoul had reached a "dead end." The shooting occurred when a large group of pupils stoned an Israeli civilian vehicle on the main road running through the town.

The vines on the hill - some 550 in all - were uprooted systematically by electric saw in an apparent protest against a government decision not to allow the Kiryat Arba settlers to build on the hill.

Hebron Mayor Fahd Kawasma met yesterday with the military governor of Hebron to discuss the Ja'abari Hill affair and the continuing occupation of the old Hadassah building in the town by a group of women and children from Both these matters, Kawasma told

The Post yesterday, were making his townspeople "very nervous." He said the military governor had in-formed him that he was awaiting the government's decision on what to do about the Hebron sit-in.

The women's protest, which has the active backing of Gush Emunim, was sharply criticized by Prime Minister Menahem Begin at Sunday's cabinet meeting.

30th anniversary amnesty report to Navon today

By DAVID RICHARDSON Jerusalem Post Reporter

Justice Minister Shmuel Tamir will present the president today with a final report summarizing the activities of the three amnesty committees appointed to recommend which prisoners should benefit from the state's 30th anniversary.

It is understood that the committees recommended reductions in sentence or full amnesties in about one-fifth of the cases.

The committees examined some 4,000 files and their recommendations were passed on to the justice minister. The minister then conveys these recommendations, together with his opinion, to the president, who is authorized by law to grant the

The committees were appointed in May last year and were headed by retired justices of the Supreme Court. They were to examine the files of all prisoners in the country's jails, excluding those who had been sentenced in military courts, with a view to recommending amnesty or reduced sentences.

Among the last cases to be reviewed was that of the former generalsecretary of Kupat Holim, Asher Yadlin, who was sentenced in 1977 to a five-year term for embezzlement.

Defence Minister Ezer Weizman ecently asked Chief of Staff Rafael Eitan to consider a similar move for soldiers who had been sentenced to prison by military courts, in view of the recently signed peace treaty with Egypt. It is reliably learned that the chief of staff and the judge advocategeneral are considering the sugges-tion favourably, and a detailed list of their recommendations and decision will be published soon.

Hurvitz offered cabinet post

By SHLOMO MAOZ Jerusalem Post Reporter Prime Minister Menahem Begin

has offered Yigal Hurvitz, the former minister of industry, trade and tourism, another cabinet post, parliamentary sources said yesterday. The portfolio offered is that of Communications, currently held by Energy Minister Yitzhak Moda'i.

Hurvitz, who heads the "hawkish" wing of the La'am Likud faction, resigned from the cabinet last September in protest against the Camp David accord. He has firmly opposed the government's autonomy plan for the West Bank and the Gaza Strip, as well as the agreement to give up Israeli settlements in Sinai. But he has avoided making a final break with the Likud.

Hurvitz has not yet replied to Begin's offer, the sources said.

Three freed terrorists attend pro-PLO meeting in Basel

By IAN BLACK

Jerusalem Post Reporter Senior officials of the Palestine Liberation Organization, three of the 76 terrorists released in the controversial exchange for an Israeli reserve soldier, West Bank mayors and leaders of the Israeli New Communist List (Rakah) rubbed shoulders at a pro-Palestinian meeting that ended in Basel, Switzerland on Sunday.

Rakah spokesman Uzi Burstein, who returned to Israel from Switzerland last night, told The Jerusalem Post that Farouk Kaddoumi, head of the political department of the PLO, had told him that the PLO was prepared to accept a state in the West Bank, the Gaza Strip and East Jerusalem alongside the State of Israel.

Kaddoumi also stressed, Burstein reported, that the PLO wanted the implementation of all UN decisions from 1947 (when the international body decided to partition Palestine into separate Jewish and Arab states) to the present day.
When asked whether this meant that the PLO would demand a return to the 1947 partition borders, Kaddoumi answered no. Burstein reported, and said that the organization would accept the borders of June 4, 1967, as "final." Kaddoumi — who is often describ-ed as the PLO's "foreign minister" insisted, however, that Israel must recognize the right of the Palestinians to create their own

Peres said that Prof. Moshe Arens, chairman of the Foreign Affairs and Defence Committee, had several times demanded information about the release, but had been turned down flat.

Shai's Meir Amit, a former chief of IDF intelligence, wrote Arens yesterday charging that the release of so many killers saddled Israel "with a price which would be too heavy: to pay one day." Amit said that the mass release would make it simple for the killers to perpetrate more crimes. "What moral right will we have in future, not to surrender to blackmail, when they seize hostages?" he asked.

The Alignment's Haim Bar-Lev, a former chief of staff, also wrote Arens to complain about the Amram exchange, and to demand a report on the action taken by the security authorities during the Nahariya assault last month, and the lessons to

'Legionnaire's disease' identified in Israel

TEL AVIV (Itim). — The first local case of the mysterious "Legionnaire's disease" that claimed dozens of lives in the U.S., was recently discovered in a 42-year-old woman, who was thought to have died of

Dr. Eltan Rubenstein, head of the infectious diseases unit at Sheba Medical Centre in Tel Hashomer, told an army radio interviewer last night that the woman had definitely died of the viral infection, despite its superficial resemblance to acute pneumonia. He said other Israelis may have died of "Legionnaire's disease" without its having been identified as such.

The malady first appeared some three years ago at a convention of the American Legion in Philadelphia. After several weeks 29 of the 182 participating war veterans died of an unidentified disease which was thereupon named for them. Only after intensive laboratory investigation was the cause of the deaths found to be a virus found mainly in water and air-conditioning systems. The virus is particularly difficult to isolate. The disease, which usually afflicts people over 60, is manifested in symptoms of pneumonia, diarrhea, coughing, dizziness and high fever.

sel Diamond industry gets IL800m. credit subsidy

By SHLOMO MAOZ

The diamond industry is to be subsidized to the tune of IL800m. a year, at the expense of the taxpayer. This is the gist of the credit agreement finalized recently between Bank of Israel Governor Arnon Gainy and Industry, Trade and Tourism Minister Gideon Patt.

According to the agreement, the diamond industry will receive foreign currency loans at a rate equivalent to 60 per cent of that offered on the London market, plus

1.5 per cent service charge.
This represents a notable achievement for the diamond industry, which has been locked in a dispute with the Bank of Israel for about a year. The bank was originally prepared to subsidize credit to the tune of no more than 30 per cent and not 40 per cent, as finally agreed. Also, the bank originally held out for 2 per cent transaction fees, finally settling for only 1.5 per

For the past year, the diamond dealers refused to pay the 11 per cent interest (including transaction fees) demanded by the Bank of Israel, settling for a compromise of 9 per cent — well below the rate on world markets. With rates continuing to fall, the merchants pressed for an even greater subsidy and, under the latest agreement, will be receiving terest (including fees).

Patt demended that the diamond industry be further compensated if interest rates on the world market continued to fail. Gafny refused, however, insisting that the rate. offered to the industry be allowed to float - upwards as well as downwards, depending on market

JERUSALEM POST POLL Almost 50% say 'yes' to Egyptian holiday

Nearly half the population wants to visit Egypt in the coming year, according to the latest public opinion poll conducted by the Modi'in Exahi applied research centre for The Jerusalem Post. The poll was a representative sample of 1,249 adult Israelis. They were asked: "If the border opens to Egypt, would you go there in the coming year?"

The replies were: Yes, 45.9 per cent; no, 41.2 undecided 4.2; no rep-

Centre directors Dr. Mina Zemach and Amiran Yarkoni, in analyzing the responses, indicate that Israelis of Asian-African origin are more interested in making the trip immediately than those of European-American origin. Moreover, interest in going to Egypt decreased with age, those over 50 years old showing the least interest. The religious section of the population and residents of Beersheba and the southern districts of the country revealed a gypt now than the rest. The polisters report that voters for the Likud and the NRP show more interest in the idea than supporters of the Alignment and the detunct DMC.

The idea to hold the "construction camp" came from fans wanting to show their opposition to the government freeze on the stadium's con-

Arab university students start scholarship fund

Jerusalem Post Reporter

NAZARETH. — The (national) Arab Student Committee decided yesterday to establish an endowment fund for Arab students claiming they are shortchanged by government grants. It appealed to the heads of Arab local councils and public figures to donate to the fund.

A spokesman for the committee said that the government does not give any encouragement to Arab students. Whereas 14 per cent of Israel's population is Arab, only 3.4 per cent of university students are Araba; and only 3 per cent of the money granted to students goes to Arabs, he said.

Three vears ago a similar fund was formed which accumulated several hundred thousand pounds. But the fund came under the control of the Sons of the Village, the Progressive National Movement and other elements who oppose the Rakah-affiliated committee and refused to give money to students who were not of their own political persuasion, The Jerusalem Post learned.

Prince Fahd's 'medical absence' will end soon

Jerusalem Post Correspondent WASHINGTON. — Saudi Crown Prince Fahd will return to Riyadh within a few days, "ready to resume his duties," "The Washington Post" has reported.

"The Post," quoting Saudi sources in Riyadh, said that Fahd's absence from Saudi Arabia during the past six weeks has been ''purely medical."

"A back ailment, complicated by exhaustion and overweight," were the medical problems cited by the Saudi sources. The Saudis said that Fahd, who is the top governing official in Saudi Arabia, has lost some 15 kilos. During the past several weeks,

Saudi officials have been trying to play down reports of a rift in the royal family. The reports included speculation that Fahd has been losing power to other members of the Saudi officials yesterday describ-

Ugandan leaders plan final anti-Amin push

KAMPALA (UPI). — Senior military commanders met in seclusion outside Kampala yesterday to plan the conquest of Idi Amin's home territory in northwest Uganda, where forces serving the new government face thousands of loyal Amin troops and a hostile civilian population armed with spears and Senior officials from Tanzania and the government of President Yusufu Lule met to plan their strategy for the last phase of the liberation of Uganda - seizing the two-fifths of northern Uganda which are still under control of Amin loyalists.

Military officials said after the session that they expected little resistance in capturing the towns of Gulu and Lira, which are, respectively, north and northeast of Kampala. But the officials agreed that they anticipated heavy resistance at the town of Arua, in the extreme northwest of the country close to the borders with Zaire and Sudan.

Civilians fleeing the northwest area reported as many as 10,000 Amin soldiers in the region - a figure far higher than previously Tanzanian military officers agreed there could be that many Amin soldiers in the area, but said they believed that at least some of them had already fled to neighbouring Sudan.

The area around Arua is considered Amin's home region because it is the centre in Uganda of Amin's tribe, the Kakwa.

Before the fall of Kampala to the Tanzanians three weeks ago, Arua was heavily fortified by Amin's commanders and there was speculation that a last stand was being prepared

Capucci gains papal audience, given European assignment

VATICAN CITY (UPI). - Pope John Paul II yesterday appointed Greek Catholic bishop Hilarion Capucci as visiting priest to Melchite church groups in Western Europe.

Capucci, the former Melchite bishop of Jerusalem who spent 39 months in an Israeli jail on a conviction of smuggling weapons to PLO terrorists, will be administering to Melchite groups in France, Belgium, Luxembourg, The Netherlands and Switzerland, the Vatican said.

The bearded prelate was arrested in 1974 after he returned to Israel from Lebanon in a diplomatic limousine filled with weapons. He was convicted and stayed in jail until 1977 when intercession by the late Pope Paul VI secured his release.

UN trade and development conference opens in Manila Plea for greater world cooperation biggest economic parley opened here yesterday with pleas for urgent compromise rather than confrontation between rich and poor to spread wealth more evenly round the globe.

Delegates to the 159-member United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) were warned that time was running out in the quest for a new international economic order to raise living standards in the developing world.

Ringing appeals to see this conference make more tangible progress than previous efforts came from UN Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim and President Ferdinand Marcos of the Philippines.
Waldheim, who flew here specially during a 10-nation Asian tour, said the developed world must realize that its own economic recovery would be enhanced if it gave a boost to poorer countries and provided month-long conference as reducing trade protectionism to widen the markets for the developing world, getting food production well ahead of population growth and ending excessive dependence on oil as fuel.

"In the final analysis, a successful North-South dialogue is essential for developed economies as it is for developing ones. Without significant improvements in the overall structure of international economic relations, it seems highly unlikely to me that the longer term growth potential of the developed countries can be restored," he said.

President Marcos, whose wife, Imelda, is leading the Philippine delegation, set the tone for the conference with a call for "a reasonable accommodation (rather) than an unreasonable confrontation."

Warning that time was running out for the poor nations, the president, who presented the Third World case

Nairobi in 1976, appealed to delegates to act with greatness, courage and dignity.

The task of presiding over the conference went to 80-year-old Philippine Foreign Minister Carlos Romulo, the only surviving signatory of the UN Charter. After being elected unopposed at yesterday's opening session, General Romulo, a diminutive exjournalist, veteran diplomat and 1948 president of the UN General Assembly, delivered a stern lecture on the need for short speeches, saying the poor and hungry of the world could no longer be kept waiting for results.

"If necessary I will put you on a diet of bread and water and if necessary deprive you of all human rights, if it helps you to make progress towards reaching a new international economic order," he

Thorpe murder trial opens in London's Old Bailey today

LONDON (UPI). — Jeremy Thorpe completed the transition from the House of Commons to the Old Bailey yesterday, facing life in prison instead of a life in politics.

The one-time leader of Britain's third-ranking Liberal Party, unceremoniously dumped from Parliament in last Thursday's election, goes on trial today on charges of conspiracy and incitement to commit murder.

The trial in the No. 1 court of the famous Old Bailey Central Criminal Courts — the scene of more notable trials than any other courtroom in the country — is unprecedented in British history. No British politician has faced such serious charges, and the possible penalty is life in prison.

Thorpe, 50, sought and got a post-ponement of his trial on charges of conspiring and inciting a man to murder Norman Scott, a one-time male model who alleged a homosexual affair between Thorpe and week's election.

"We can't have two shows on the road at the same time," he quipped.

But the voters of North Devon resoundingly turfed him out of the House of Commons seat he had held for 20 years. Thorpe, banker David Holmes, businessman John le Mesurier and amusement machine distributor George Deakin all face charges of conspiring to murder Scott. Thorpe alone faces a separate charge of inciting Holmes to murder Scott. Scott claims that when Thorpe feared Scott was going to expose their involvement, he arranged to have Scott killed. A self-proclaimed "hit man" named Andrew Newton said he was paid £10,000 (more than IL400,000) by friends of Thorpe's in 1975 to kill Scott, who by then was married and had fathered a child. Arabs settle accounts with Egypt

THE OIL-RICH Arab states have launched a campaign demanding to know who has pocketed the billions of dollars of aid they claim to have given Egypt in the last few years. One report from Kuwait this week said that these states have provided Egypt with $20b. since the 1973 war.

But there are conflicting views of precisely how to settle this account. President Anwar Sadat has said that Arab aid to Egypt has totalled little more than $600m. per year since 1967; and one of Sadat's closest aides, Sayyed Marei, announced earlier that Arab financial assistance amounted to $11b. in the past 11 years.

The money problem was raised after Sadat and leaders of the oilrich states swapped insults following the decision by the latter countries to break off relations with Egypt for signing the peace treaty with Israel. This decision has left Sadat virtually isolated and friendless in the Arab world he once led.

The only governments which con-tinued to maintain embassies in Cairo are those of Sudan, the Sultanate of Oman and Somalia. Sadat's isolation was decreed last month at an Arab League ministerial conference in Baghdad which imposed political and economic sanctions against Egypt. The conference also decided to transfer the Arab League head-quarters from Cairo to Tunis at the end of this month.

The impact of the Arab boycott has been dependent on Saudi Arabia whose ambassador arrived in Cairo earlier in the week shortly after Sadat had singled out the Saudi leaders in scathing attack on the Arab critics of his peace pact with Israel. Some reports said that the Saudi ambassador, who had been recalled home, was in the Egyptian capital to negotiate a truce. Other reports, however, said that he was simply packing for his indefinite absence from Cairo.

Egypt's Minister of State for Foreign Affairs, Butros Ghall, viewed the Arab world's diplomatic break with Cairo to be 'basically symbolic." "We still have direct contact with different Arab governments through channels other than diplomatic ones," he said while stressing that the ruptures in relations "have a symbolic value rather than a real

Ghall said that Saudi Arabia was still providing Egypt with economic aid and finances for Egypt's purchase of military equipment from the U.S., Britain and France. He noted that there had been no withdrawal of Arab funds from Egyptian banks, indicating that business was going on pretty much as usual. Business will be the very last thing to be affected," the manager of an Arab-owned bank in Calro told the Associated Press. There have been no signs of the boycott affecting private investment yet."

of the average Egyptian.
Egypt was booted out of the Organization of Arab Petroleum Exporting Countries, the Arab Monetary Fund, a shipping company and various pan-Arab trade union and political organizations. Such groups, however, have little leverage on Egypt's economy and only oil-rich states such as Saudi Arabia have the power to hurt Egypt where it counts — in the pocketbook. Saudi Arabia and Kuwait together have $1.6b. in time deposits placed in Cairo banks. A $200m. deposit that came due May 1 was redeposited

after Kuwait announced it was not withdrawing money.

But one Western economist said if all the money was withdrawn at once a monetary crisis could develop since it would cause a shortage of foreign currency and Egypt would be unable to pay for needed foreign imports.

A second lever, so far unused, is the remittances from more than one million Egyptians working in Arab countries. Last year, they sent home more than $1.7b. in hard currency.

Private Arab investment, according to Egypt's investment authority, totaled $386m. at the end of last year — about 16 per cent of all foreign investment in Egypt.

Most of the private money is in real estate and in tourism-related projects such as hotel building. One Saudi-financed investment firm closed its doors this week but there are no signs of a mass exodus, business analysts said.

One major government-togovernment project that seems unaffected is the Arab Organization for Industrialization. The Cairo-based arms-making venture is funded by $1.04b. in Saudi and Gulf State oil

The loss of aid will take a long time to be felt. economists point out, since Egypt has $3b. in development money backed up in the pipeline. Egypt has long prided itself as the intellectual and political centre of the Arab world. What affect a longterm boycott would have on Egyptian public opinion is difficult to say. But for the moment man-in-thestreet reaction seems defiant. We Egyptians have been constructing their countries, taught them how to live as civilized beings, educated them. They owe us, we don't owe them," said Bahgat Hassan Mohamed, a 38-year-old Cairo salesman.

"With peace our lives will be easier and the boycott will not force us to beg them for money."

Saudi justice: does the punishment fit the crime?

Special to The Jerusalem Post On the seventh of Rabi al-Awai 1397 (February 25, 1977 to non-Moslems), Abdul-Aziz ibn Abdul-Rahman and Abdullah ibn Nazer were publicly beheaded by sword in Riyadh, desert capital of Saudi Arabia, for kidnapping and sexually assaulting a young boy.

Five months later a Saudi princess, grand-daughter of King Khaled's eldest brother, was executed by firing squad in Jeddah as an adulteress. Her lover, a com-moner, lost his head.

Almost exactly two years before, the deranged assassin of the late King Faisai, his nephew Prince Faisal ibn Musa'ad, had been bebeaded in Riyadh — with a golden

These executions, and the methods, underscore the ruthlessness of criminal justice in the oil-rich kingdom of Saudi Arabia, which in the meantime is trying to wrest itself into the industrialised society of the twentieth century. But Saudi Arabia is also the Holy Land of Islam where punishment for crimes, as interpreted from the Koran, is designed to preserve and protect a social order which - according to its apologists — has withstood the influences of more than 13 centuries.

The rationale is that there is per manence and therefore social stability in religiously inspired retribution. "In punishment there is life for you, O people of understanding," says the Koran. For crimes which violate other people's rights, the penalties are severe.

Beheading in a place of public execution is reserved for the worst crimes of premeditated murder and rape, although what is described as 'brigandage'' may also result in capital punishment including. theoretically, crucifixion.

Less severe but, ironically, less frequent in Saudi Arabia today is amputation of the right hand (also by sword) for theft. The relative infrequency of this penalty perhaps can be accounted for in that it is intended for the habitual thief, and there must be witnesses to each of most visible criminal punishment in contemporary Saudi Arabia is flogging in public. Carried out by police wielding thick canes, flogging one or more times may accompany prison sentences for "moral" crimes such as drinking alcohol and slander. Beheadings are not so uncommon as to be considered rare in Saudi Arabia today. Carried out by royal decree after midday prayers on Friday, they always attract large crowds. In Jeddah the signal that there is to be an execution is the clearing of cafe tables from an open space in the centre of the downtown hotel district. Foreigners — those unfortunate enough to be in the vicinity at the time - are encouraged to watch the performance of Saudi justice. When the head falls, the crowd indicates its approval of the executioner by clapping.

It can be seen that an additional and not insignificant deterrent inherent in these punishments is that they are carried out in public. To the proud Saudi, the shame of public exposure would be punishment quite as painful as the physical.

A result is that the Saudis are an unusually law-abiding people. Robberies do occur, and the incidence of theft is believed to have increased in recent years (the Saudi police are loathe to release precise statistics), but such crime is nowhere near the problem it is in, for instance, Israel.

The private citizen wasn't always so secure in the turbulent Arabian Peninsula. In the seventh century the prophet Mohammed formulated a social code butiressed by a system of religious law, the Shari'a, which presupposes both civil and religious obligations. For a time it stopped the bloodshed for which the region had always been known. The bad old ways soon returned. however, and were never effectively stamped out until the emergence, in the early part of this century, of the first Saudi monarch, King Abdul-Aziz — a Moslem fundamentalist who often demonstrated that he was prepared to back up his religious convictions with savage retribution. More than one nomadic tribe tempted to disobey his ban on blood feuds and caravan-raiding found itself attacked and the guilty tribesmen summarily executed. As events of recent years have shown, King Abdul-Aziz's own descendants have not escaped suffering the same punishment as any other Moslem. In the case of the Saudi princess executed in 1977. however, it is believed that the sentence was insisted on by the girl's grandfather, the oldest surviving son of Abdul-Aziz. King Khaled, though he disagreed, could not prevent his older brother's enforcement of the

But in an earlier case, another son of King Abdul-Aziz, Prince Mishari, in his youth shot and killed a British expatriate in Jeddah in a drunken rage. The religious leaders deliberated and found that Mishari was guilty only of "accidental" murder. The real culprit, they adjudged, was the liquor he had consumed. Having thus kept his head, Prince Mishari is now a successful. middle-aged businessman.

Hypocrisy is nowadays not so blatant in Saudi Arabia. While the mutawarin, elderly religious men wielding canes, patrol the streets to ensure that shopkeepers close promptly for prayers and that homes of many of the princes and wealthy merchants are well-stocked with liquor and other delights. And the poverty-stricken basketboy who lost his hand for stealing might ponder the "justice" of justice if he suspected the scale of kickbacks paid by some foreign firms to government functionaries and other go-betweens for "services

Nevertheless, the average Saudiin-the-suq appears to be generally in favour of the severe penalties, especially for crimes like murder and rape. Protection of womenfolk, living symbols of Saudi family honour, is causing increased concern as more and more sisters and daughters leave the seclusion of the family compound to become teachers, doctors and nurses, and administrators.

What does shock Saudis is the prevalence of crime in the West. Virtually every Saudi who travels abroad, to London or Paris or New York, seems to have a tale of hotel room robberies, financial swindles and even of mugging, an incident inconceivable on the streets of Riyadh or Jeddah. Inevitably, reports of official corruption in Israel are played up in the Saudi

It is doubtful that Western expatriates in Saudi Arabia (there are more than 70,000 in the kingdom at present) would suffer the more extreme penalties, but several years ago a young Briton received a 15year jail sentence for drug smuggling.

With a degree of inconsistency, some Saudis tend to justify the harshness of penalties in their own country by citing such cases as the execution by firing squad of con-victed murderer Gary Gilmour in the U.S. two years ago.

One Western-educated Saudi stressed that the authorities' policy was becoming more humanitarian because, for instance, a convicted thief about to lose his hand was these days first given a local anaesthetic. And in the case of a man about to be beheaded? "Well, he doesn't really need an anaesthetic, does he?" the Saudi smiled.

Bid to oust Egypt from Islamic meet

HARD-LINE ÀRAB states are planning a move to drum Egypt out of the 82-nation Islamic movement at a meeting of Islamic foreign ministers opening today in Fez, Morocco's religious and cultural capital.

Libya and Iraq have given notice they intend to make a vigorous effort to extend the Arab boycott of Egypt to the whole Islamic world.

The move was likely to face opposition from Islamic moderates such as Malaysia, and Indonesia, anxious to preserve the fragile solidarity of the Islamic world. Sadat apparently tried to pre-empt

An Egyptian Foreign Ministry communique said Deputy Premier Hassan Touhami would take part in the meeting only if Morocco, as the host country, agreed to co-sponsor the Egyptian proposal.

The Egyptian communique described an Israeli withdrawal from East Jerusalem as "one of the essential foundations of a true peace" in the Middle East.

The Islamic movement, now comprising more than one-fourth of the members of the United Nations, has expanded into a wide-ranging framework for economic financial, their senter their senter builded to the senter among the literate countries. Its permanent secretariat, based in Saudi Arabia "pending the liberation of Jerusalem," is headed by Senegal's Amadou Karim Gay.

Egypt's participation in the Fez meeting was likely to run into bitter opposition from the hard-liners who accuse Sadat of collusion with Israel.

Morocco, which is hosting the meeting, is one of the Arab nations which broke relations with Egypt. Moroccan officials were careful to point out that the invitations to the Fez meeting were issued before the Arab leaders, meeting in Baghdad, agreed on their boycott of Egypt.

Morroccan sources said they feared Egypt might walk out and slam the door on the Islamic move-ment if the hard-liners' anti-Egyptian position gathered momentum. Alternatively, the sources said, there was a danger Arab delegations themselves may decide to walk out if a majority of the foreign ministers favour keeping Egypt within the

Lebanon's Kalachnikov generation

THE FRENCH-LANGUAGE daily "L'Orient-Le Jour" over the. weekend published the results of a survey it said showed that about onethird of all Lebanese youth between the ages of 16 and 22 have carried arms and fought since the start of the 1975-76 civil war. 'The Kalashnikov generation was born as the natural offspring of a diabolic pair: fanaticism mated to violence," the newspaper com-

It based its conclusions on responses by 900 Lebanese, aged 16 to 22, to a series of 54 questions.

"L'Orient-Le Jour" said that the sample reflected "all of the youth , from (Christian) East as well as (Mainly Moslem) West, belonging to all social groups," but did not indicate how large the 16-22 age group. was or what percentage of Lebanon's estimated two million people it represented.

Besides finding that 32 per cent of the newspaper survey also showed that the youth of Lebanon were heavily politicized:

78 per cent said they were seriously interested in politics,

· 91 per cent read at least one newspaper every day, 56 per cent sympathize with a political party,

34 per cent have belonged to a political party. "L'Orient-Le Jour" quoted a young member of the Phalangist party, named Marcel, as saying: "At first, all I wanted to do was fight, just fight. It had nothing to do with theory. We had the occasion, for once, to take our destiny into our own hands. With time, I understood better why in the long run, I was fighting. It quoted the young Christian militant as saying that Phalangist military commander Bashir Jemayel "made me, and hundreds of others like me, realize that this war, in the end, was not just for our survival, even as a (Christian) community, but to ensure our future as a specific (Lebanese) social group.'

A 16-year-old named Imad, identified as a Shiite Moslem, said he belonged to the Organization for Communist Action in Lebanon because ''it is the organization of the Shiites in revolt."

The daily said: "Today, Imad handles dialectic with the same agility as his Kalashnikov (a Sovietmade AK-47 assault rifle)."

He told the newspaper that Lebanese communist leader Mohsen Ibrahim "is the first Ayatollah for Lebanon."

"L'Orient-Le Jour" observed that "for the West, and for the East, the entry into the parties was made in a totally disorderly way, and was essentially spontaneous. The politics was figured out later. One belonged to fight, to defend one's country, to assure survival, to chase away foreigners, to protect one's family, to safeguard one's honour."

the sample group had carried arms, Moscow steps into Beirut conflict

EXCLUDED BY American diplomacy from Middle East peacemaking, the Soviet Union is considering reasserting its regional influence - by way of Lebanon. Well-informed Arab sources report that in recent Soviet-Syrian consultations, Moscow has offered both arms and experts to help stiffen the Palestinians and their allies in Lebanon in the event of a Syrian withdrawal. Hitherto, the Russians have cautiously resisted being sucked into the Lebanese imbroglio, so their present willingness to contemplate direct involvement suggests a major change in policy.

Lebanon, already a battlefield for its warring communities and the conflicting interests of Syria and Israel, thus looks like becoming an arena of super-power confrontation.

In any event, in the wake of the Egyptian-Israel peace treaty, it is the angry focus of the region, where all the interested parties are engaged in a battle of wills. Most of them have much to lose. The Soviet Union, not yet a player, has something to Arab sources say that the Soviet argument in favour of intervention is that the U.S., by its recent commitments to both Israel and Egypt, has infringed the tacit agreement between the super-powers to refrain from involvement in military pacts in the area in the interests of detente.

The unprecedented American military guarantees to Israel (under the Memorandum of Agreement of March 28; and the parallel undertaking to equip Egypt for an activist role in Africa are seen by Moscow &s a direct physical challenge to its local friends such as Syria and to its clients - Angola, Libya, Ethiopia and South Yemen.

Immediate Soviet (ears appear to focus on the Egyptian-Libyan frontier. The suspicion is that President Anwar Sadat is looking for a pretext to dispose of that thorn in his flank, Colonel Muammer Gaddafi, now that the Libyan leader has been weakened by his failures in Uganda and Chad and while his protector, Algeria, is preoccupied with internal

With the Egyptian Third Army now in the Western Desert. observers do not rule out an Egyptian strike at Cyrenaica — a repeat performance of the brief Egyptian-Libyan war of July 1977.

Similarly, the Soviets fear that continued Israeli retaliations against Palestinian strong-points in Lebanon may put the Syrian troops there at risk, by threatening to draw them into a conflict on unfavourable terms with grave potential consequences for the regime in-Damascus. It is precisely because of such dangers that President Hafez Assad is known to have drawn up contingency plans for withdrawing his army.

In this cautious policy, Assad has full Soviet support. The Russians have made it plain to him that they can be of no help in any aggressive role Syria may wish to play. However, Moscow has been unatinting in its contributions to Syria's defence, reportedly supplying both SAM-9 missiles and MIG-27 jets.

Syria's unhappy dilemma is that it can afford neither to wage war nor (in view if its diatribes against Sadat and an inflamed public opinion) to talk peace. Egypt's peace with Israel has sharply trimmed freedom of manocuvre, obliging it to endure a perilous status quo without an adequate strategy. Among the perils Syria faces are, at home, a murder campaign conducted by Islamic terrorists against Ba'ath party leaders and prominent members of the ruling Alawi comits new and powerful partner, Iraq, characterised by a strong mutual mistrust; the ever-present possibility of being stampeded into a suicidal military clash with Israel by Palestinian terrorists.

In its opposition to the peace treaty, Assad's regime appears to have set as its first priority the overthrow of Sadat. But many Arabs in positions of responsibility privately shudder at the probable consequences for the area if the treaty, for all its inadequacles, were to fail. It would undoubtedly result in a further upsurge of radicalism, of Islamic fundamentalism, and of Palestinian terrorism. putting several Arab regimes at risk and setting back for long years the chance of sane discourse and a peaceful

In full awareness of these dangerous possibilities, the U.S. is now devoting considerable effort to stabilising the Lebanese situation. In particular, it was pressing to allow Lebanese government troops into the south, while at the same time, according to Arab sources. encouraging Assad to defer the projected withdrawal of his troops. It must be Washington's view that Syrian peace-keeping, however im-perfect, is preferable to a Russian in-

President Carter's appointment of Robert Strauss as his representative in the coming negotiations with Egypt and Israel on the issue of autonomy is a fresh demonstration of the President's will to make progress. But the peace process remains a very fragile growth. Nursing it along. Washington has no wish to see it endangered by the escalation of the Lebanese crisis into a super-power confrontation.

Scandinavians soar in pole vault

By PAUL KOHN Post Sports Reporter

TEL AVIV. - African athletes at the Happel Games had mixed fortunes in Ramat Gan yesterday, but there was Scandinavian jubilation reaching all the way to Finland.

One of the highlights for the crowd of 8,000 was the pole vault event, in which two 22-year-old Swedes both soared to personal highs, though they had to suffice with second and third places to Finland's Kimmo Pallonen. Pallonen cleared 5 metres. 30 centimetres. Miro Zalar went over at 5.20m., beating his previous best of 5.15m., and Attila Puskas cleared

Begin invited to closing of

TEL AVIV. — Prime Minister Menahem Begin has been invited to be guest-of-honour at tonight's closing ceremony of the 11th International Hapoel Games at Jerusalem's Binyanei Ha'ooma. The event, which starts at 8.30 p.m., includes a full artistic programme, with the participation of top groups of dancers and gymnasts from Israel and abroad.

On the sports front, the centre of interest today will be the final stage of the six-day bicycle race from Kibbutz Dan to Beersheba.

The only remaining sporting events being held today are international men's basketball, between Israel's National "B" team and Austria at Kibbutz Mishman Ha'emek, starting at 8 p.m.; and men's table termis between Maccabi Israel and Borussia Dusseldorf at Tel Aviv's Yerushalmi school at 5.30 p.m.

DALLAS, Texas (AP). - John McEnroe subdued favoured Bjorn Borg, 7-5, 4-6, 6-2, 7-6 yesterday to capture the $100,000 first-place prize in the World Championship of Tennis finals.

McEnroe clinched the match with an ace in the fourth set tie-breaker and celebrated by bounding around the court with his fists clenched in victory. McEnroe, whose previous biggest victory was the Grand Prix Masters, took the fourth set tiebreaker 7-5 against Borg, who struggled all day with his serve.

Who's the fastest (backward) runner?

By STEVEN ROSENBERG Jerusalem Post Reporter

What is the fastest time for running 100 yards backwards? If you don't have the answer at the tip of your tongue, there is only one place to find it — "The Guiness Book of Records." Paul Wilson set the record with a time of 13.8 seconds for the 100-yard backward run at Hasting, New Zealand, on April 10, 1977. He replaced tap dancer Bill Robinson (who often played in films with Shirley Temple) who set the old mark of 13.5

seconds over 40 years ago. Who cares? Well, Stan Greenberg for one. Greenberg, editor of the sports section of "The Guiness Book of Records," was here recently for the International Book Fair in Jerusalem. And a lot of other people must be interested, too. "The Guiness Book of Records" is now in its 26th edition and is currently printed in over 15 languages.

Thirty-five million copies of the book have been sold since it was started in 1956. The book contains records for the highest, lowest,

Greenberg's job is to verify the records, and to decide what categories go in, or are taken out of, the book. Verification of Wilson's record, for instance, came from the New Zealand track federation, whose of ficials timed the run. Sexual records are not allowed "However, we receive claims that belong in 'Playboy' - not in 'The Guiness Book of Records',"

Greenberg admits with a grin. Records are broken so often that Greenberg admits it is hard to keep up with all the changes. He claims that almost one-third of all the entries in the sports section change every year and expects the trend to continue because of improved training for athletes, better equipment, and more people participating in sports. Greenberg sees one record as being insurmountable: "No one has even come close to Bob Seamon's jump of 29 feet 2.5 inches at the 1968 Mexico City Olympics. That jump, the circumstances of which are unlikely to be duplicated, is a 21st century record."

Youngsters in limbo

By JUDY SIEGEL / Jerusalem Post Reporter

PERHAPS it was visions of the hated President Leonid Brezhnev that made the teenagers so tense as they filed into Belt Hanassi to meet the President of Israel. Perhaps it was the sight of policemen — feared in their native Russia — who goodnaturedly searched their bags at the

Probably the main reason why the 27 Russian-Jewish youngsters were and even defensive was that they are in limbo -their future hanging on a single deci-are sion taken by their parents. Their hearts were in Israel, but their parents were in Rome, preparing for emigration to the U.S. and Canada after having left the Soviet Union on an Israeli visa.

Their manner provided a polynant contrast to the 25 Western teenager contestants in the World Jewish Bible Quiz for Youth who - exuding buoyant self-confidence and sure of their identity — had met with President Yitzhak Navon an hour earlier. Unlike the young Bible scholars, the emigrants seemed lost, unwilling to

THE OLD CITY of Jerusalem is a beautiful town, yet apart from the Dome of the Rock, it has no beautiful or splendid buildings. It has no town hall, no magnificent synagogues or churches, no majestic palaces or houses, no lovely streets or squares, certainly no Versailles. And yet it is

It is beautiful because of its unity, because it is all built of stone, because it is alive, the mediaeval alleys full of shops and people; because of its many surprises, its hidden courtvards and gardens, its narrow streets and small-scale buildings; because of the history hiding behind every corner.

It is beautiful because it sits so radiantly in the landscape behind its great wall, crowning the hilltop above the arid valleys, because of the clear, exhilarating light; and because of its three-colour discipline golden-brown buildings and hills, blue sky and green trees.

Why does it - strangely - have r only one splendid building?

First of all, Jerusalem has, since the fifth century BCE been a poor provincial town belonging to some distant empire. And kings_and call themselves Russians and unable to call themselves Jews.

Looking at their blank faces, the President realized that he was facing a Jewish tabula rasa and proceeded to spend two hours in a dialogue about their past and their

He composed his ad its message deliberately, waiting after each sentence for an official from the Jewish Henry's Youth Aliya department — which prought the youngsters here for a month-long tour — to translate it into Russian.

'I had lunch yesterday with a number of Jews who safator many years in Soviet prisons under difyears in Soviet prisons inder di-ficult conditions because they wanted to go to Israel." Neven told them. "Now they are here with their families. When Wolf Zelmanson was asked whether he regretted his attempt to hisck a plane out of Russia, he said that coming on aliya was worth 10 years of imprisonment - even 15 years aren't too big a

Children of noshrim arrive at Ben-Gurien Airport.

Not every Russian Jew has had to go to jail. "Many can come directly to Israel. Why do you think they want so much to come? Because we are a very old people, with a history that many nations don't have. The last time we were independent here was 2.000 years ago. 'Israelis come from 102 countries.

Why did they come? Because they wanted to live in a country where they could decide their own fate and not have an outsider tell them what to do," Navon continued. "Jews were accused of being nonproductive and lazy, of being cowards. But here we have produced one of the best agricultural systems in the world; and our army has gained the respect of our enemies."

THE TEENAGERS listened quietly, but many glanced down rather than at Navon, as if they were ashamed. "I have a proposal to make to you," Navon continued, "You must learn Jewish history and religion and the contribution of the Jews to the world. Only after that can you decide what you want to do. If you don't know what you're rejecting, you'll go through the rest of your lives wondering why."

The youngsters stopped averting their eyes and looked directly at the President. "I know that you're in a difficult position. You think you're bound by your parents' decision. But you can decide for yourselves," he asserted, noting that Youth Aliya institutions have been home and school for tens of thousands of young Jews who came here without their parents

"If I thought that by giving you a presidential order to come it would do any good, I would issue an order," he said with a smile. "But I hope that I'll see you here next Independence Day as citizens of Israel.'

The President called on some of the youngsters to stand before the microphone, and talk about themselves, what they think of Israel and why their parents decided to''drop out''in Vienna.

"Only the Jewish state has the ability to give us such a fine present as this tour," said Anatoly, a long-haired boy wearing a "Jerusalem" T-shirt. Pressed by Navon to say

'this is a free country.' "The negative things are so minuscule compared to the good things that I would feel ridiculous mentioning them," he said, and gave the floor to another,

what he didn't like about Israel,

Anatoly stubbornly refused. Thinking that the former Russian was afraid to voice criticism, Navon prodded him gently, noting that

"The impressive thing here is that everyone can say what he thinks," noted Marina, a girl from Kiev. "In the month we've been in Israel, we saw such happiness. People speak from their heart. And when we visited a Nahal settlement at Rinonim, we found that soldiers served in the army with a completely different feeling from Russia.'

Most of the teenagers agreed that their parents decided against Israel because they were afraid of its death, war and terrorism."

But Alec, a former resident of Vilna, strongly disagreed."The drop-outs are looking for an easier life, and they don't feel like Jews!"

AT THAT, the president looked toward the back of the room and pointed at his military aide de camp, the lost his whole family in the Holocaust. Then he called on one of the Beit Hanassi employees who served the guests juice and cookies, She also lost everyone in the Holocaust, and came here alone," said Navon. "And there are 200,000 Israelis like them. And six million Jews died in the Holocaust. They died without any purpose...

"So soldiers die in our wars. It's a very sad thing. But that's the price a nation pays for its freedom and independence— to ensure that another Holocaust will never take place again... So we go to the army without complaining."

Hearing no criticism of Israel from his guests, the President volunteered his own. "I'll tell you what things are wrong in Israel. It's better that you know them now and not be disappointed later."

Israelis aren't as good-mannered or respectful as they should be, he said. But that negative trait is rooted in the ploneering days, when doing was the important thing and the appearance of things was belittled. The social and economic gaps between Orientals and Ashkenazim is another scar on the nation, as well as the fact that it hasn't yet been able to make peace with all of its

Arab neighbours. "The choice is in your hands," concluded the President. "You can live a life of drinking Coca Cola and living in a villa in America — or of taking part in the rebuilding of the Jewish State."

Breaking for the first time into applause, the children rose and asked to take a group photo with the President. "I wish I could have spent a whole day with them." he said to an aide later.

(The Jewish Agency's Aliya Department has approved a proposal to send copies of a tape of this encounter to the transit camps In Vienna and Rome. The President's conversation with the teenagers will be played to all interested Russian emigrants during the days they must decide whether to go to Israel or elsewhere.)

THE EARTHLY JERUSALEM / Ulrik Plesner

mperors build magnificently only in their capitals, for their own glory. King Herod was the exception, and the remains of this great builder's work, together with Suleiman's walls, are the only signs of grandeur that exist. · ·

Even the Crusaders contributed nothing memorable, because their power was weak, as was their economy. They built poor, transplanted village churches; and all later churches were built mainly for symbolic reasons, in order to have a foothold in Jerusalem, not because there was a thriving Christian community.

Great buildings are a result of a concentration of power and money. Both the Jewish and the Moslem communities were poor provincials, barely subsisting at times, and certainly not able to burst into exuberant and expensive construction. ' In any case, no far-away ruler would allow his subject peoples to get the wrong ideas by giving them a sense of importance - which, unfortunately, is one of the major functions of great buildings.

Secondly, there have been wars. Jerusalem has been besieged or con-. quered no less than 36 times. And twice it has been levelled to the ground, first by Nebuchadnezzar in 587 BCE and then by the Emperor Titus in the year 70 CE. While Jerusalem was never a commercial city, because it had no harbour or centre of trade, it did lie in a corridor of the wars between Egypt and the empires that rose and fell around the Mediterranean and by the river Euphrates. It was often on the path of some conqueror to somewhere else — the Egyptians to Syria, the Turks to Egypt, the

When the Romans destroyed Jerusalem, for instance, they left only a heap of ruins, and among them were the famous buildings of the great Temple built by King Herod, who was one of the most personal and daring architects in THIRDLY, there were earthquakes. Jerusalem, as we were reminded recently, lies in an earthquake-belt and is always subject to small tremors. But about once in a century there is a major tremor. and of all possible types of building, the traditional Jerusalem house is the least resistant and most vulnerable in times of earthquake. The thick, solid walls and roofs of stone and earth are very likely to crack and collapse. Many of the sup porting arches above the narrow alleys in the Old City were constructed after the last big earthquake in the '20s, in order to shore up cracking and bulging buildings.

The archaeological tunnel near the Western Wall gives a fascinating picture of these periodic razings of Jerusalem. Whenever the city was flattened by war or earthquake, the next generation came and built on top of the ruins. As a result, around the Wall, and going down nearly 30 metres, is layer upon layer of building rubble, each layer completely divorced from its Had Jerusalem not. been destroyed, and had it been the centre of a Jewish kingdom, or a sultanate or an empire, it would unquestionably have had many magnificent and famous buildings

But of course, by the same token it might also by now have destroyed itself in the great commercial expansion of the 19th and 20th centuries. like London and Paris. On balance, therefore, it is impossible to know whether Jerusalem was lucky or un-

New York show for Jerusalem artist

Special to The Jerusalem Post

JERUSALEM artist Sally Ariel's one-woman show at the National Art Centre in New York's Soho district is causing a lively response. Her exhibition is dominated by powerful pastels and charcoals which reaffirm and reassess Jewish secular experience in the modern world.

Combining both primitive and avant garde influences, Arlel skilfully forms a uniquely personal state-ment about her life and the Judean Hills where she lives.

Born in Arkansas, Sally Ariel grew up in Oklahoma and studied fine arts at Washington University, Missouri. She came to Israel for the first time in 1967. She spent the next few years living in both Israel and New York, where she studied at Cooper Union and the Art Students League.

She says about her drawings, "I

A dialogue begins between the paper. the chalk, and myself. They become palpable beings, working through and under from the inside of the paper, out to the surface, just as the hills do.'

Sally Ariel has also just had a show in Mississippi. Her show at the National Art Center will run through

'Women want to be women' even in the kibbutz factory

By MACABEE DEAN Jerusalem Post Reporter

TEL AVIV. - How can you get kibbutz women out of the kitchens and into the factories?

This is a question troubling industrial managers in the kibbutzim - which were founded more than half a century ago on the premise that women be given equal job op-portunities with their menfolk. But since then, the "liberated" women have drifted back to their traditional roles in life - "in the kitchen, the nursery, kindergartens, and schools," according to Shlome Roth, acting coordinator of the Association of Kibbutz Industries.

According to his figures, women account for only 2,000 of the 12,000 persons employed in the 350 plants in the country's kibbutzim.

There are 300 communal settlements in Israel, and only 24 do not have an industrial undertaking. The number of factories varies from one to four in most kibbutzim.

"We have actually run out of manpower — that is to say — men to man the work benches in the factories," Roth said, adding "and we are doing everything possible to persuade women to leave the laundry for the

the women. Shapiro spent the last nine months interviewing 70 women and 60 men, and in summing up his results.

One of the main findings was that women want to be women," and this means (among other things) coming home every evening to hubby and the children. Therefore, they do not want to work in a plant which does not have a "flexible work day," that is they want "to dash home in the middle of the day and bake.a cake for the family and clean up

Since women are "family centred," they avoid working in plants which require evening or night

They also like to work in teams, and not alone, Shapiro said. They like companionship, and they like to talk, and as far as we were able to learn, their endless chatter does not lower their productivity.

Women also don't like the idea of leaving the kibbutz to be trained. "If we bring the courses to the plants, we find that we can enlist their enthusiasm to study and to go later

Another factor is that kibbutz women like to spend their early productive years in work connected with the care of their children. "But when they reach the end of their child-bearing period, many of them think they are too old to learn a new vocation, so they tend to stick with the kitchen and the kindergarten. Many middle-aged women can be talked into working in a plant if we can convince them that the age of 40 is not too late in life to learn a new vocation. After all, Shapiro said, "many of the women have 30 to 40 fruitful years of work ahead of them.

We have some women in their 70s and even 80s who work in plants." True, their productivity is not as high as a person at the height of his powers, but just the same they can turn out 70 per cent of such a person, he added. Moreover, many of them become so "work-centred," that the feeling of usefulness is a highly motivating factor in their lives.

And finally, women want to work in plants where "human and ecology standards are high." For some reason they believe that any hired hand in a kibbutz is given inferior work to do, and thus they shy away from working in the same depart-

German firms offer help with Negev construction

A delegation of contractors from Berlin has asked to take part in Negev construction programmes, the spokesman of the Labour and Social Affairs Ministry announced this week. The delegation made its request during a meeting on Sunday in Jerusalem with Labour Minister Israel Katz.

The visiting German group, headed by Horst Lekutat, of the Berlin Senate, and Ulrich Teuffert, chairman of a contractor's union, came here for one week as guests of the Labour Ministry to tour the country's building industry. Katz said the delegation's request has been referred to the Defence and Construction Ministers.

Insurance companies chided for complacency

By MACABEE DEAN Jerusalem Post Reporter

TEL AVIV. — The Commissioner of Savings and Insurance, Dr. Ben-Ami Zuckerman, yesterday welcomed the study day on "Captive insurance companies" sponsored by Ben-Zur (Insurance) Ltd. But he then took the participants of the insurance companies to task for their complacency.

(Ben-Zur Ltd. are insurance consultants and not an insurance com-

Zuckerman asked the participants, about half of whom represented local insurance companies, why they "were so conservative in their approach."

"Are you full of self-satisfaction? Do you lack competition? Are you functioning in a static economy?" he asked, and then answered his own questions in the negative.

"The complacency of the in-surance companies," he thought (admitting that he was guessing, until a research in depth had been made), stems from the fact that they were operating in a highly inflationary country, and thus did everything possible to hedge against the effects of inflation. This meant that they leaned heavily on govern-ment linked bonds, and didn't have to go out to look for other in-

He told the participants that they "lacked professional manpower. But he admitted that this was probably due to the fact that their policy-holders did not demand any expertise from their insurers.

Comparing the banking system to the insurance industry, he noted that and acted swiftly to meet changing conditions arising from the lifting of foreign currency controls, of Moreover, the banks were much more technology-minded, and moved swiftly to introduce computerized accounts and automatic tellers.

Zuckerman called on the insurance companies to draw up more innovative policies, adjusted to specific needs. He questioned the present policy of not linking pay-outs to a client to the inflationary spiral if the client paid all his premium at once, that is the insurance company should link the premium in one form or another.

In explaining "captive insurance companies," Ra'anan Ben-Zur, head of the local network (with offices in Tel Aviv and Jerusalem, while his mother, Mrs. Shoshana Ben-Zur, heads the London office), noted that abroad there were between 1,000 and 1,500 such firms.

A group of related companies such as those active in the petrochemical industry, who had similar problems, would band together to set up their own "captive insurance company." Since it specialized in their specific field, it could write policies considerably cheaper, and spread risks better by negotiating with re-insurance com-

So far, no such "captive" insurance company has been set up

Ben-Zur (Insurance) itself acts as consultants (or brokers) to about 30 major companies, about 85 per cent of which are in Israel. Most of these companies have assets of more than one million dollars.

Rail strike holds up grain deliveries

By YA'ACOV FRIEDLER Jerusalem Post Reporter

HAIFA. - The three-day railway strike is causing damage of thousands of dollars to grain shipping operations, but has not seriously affected general operations in Haifa port. The lack of trains, however, has forced exporters to suspend some shipments of goods to the port.

Port spokesman Yair Bar-Mashiah told The Post that the main effect of the strike was that some imports already unloaded from ships would have to be stored in the port for a few days. Importers were doing their best to engage extra trucks as an alternate means of transporta-

But the Dagon silo, which normally ships out 4,000 tons of imported grain by rail every day, is hard hit by the strike. Baruch Hecht, of the silo-management, told The Post that only trucks are now taking grain from the silo to inland stores - at the rate of 500 tons a day. This slow method of delivery will force the management to stop taking in grain from ships bringing it from the U.S.

for two days at the end of the week.

This will disrupt the schedules of two grain ships, the Israeli m.s. Avdat and the American m.s. Walter Rice, which are waiting their turn to unload. The two ships between them have brought some 50,000 tons of grain. . Each day's extra waiting of the two ships will cost the taxpayer thousands of dollars.

The port has largely cleared up the congestion that plagued it for the past month.

The director of the Shippers' Council, Arieh Mehoulal, told The Post that the rail strike is particularly hard on exporters. There had been a shortage of trucks even before the trains stopped rolling, so that it was difficult to get exports to the ports.

contract. The deal is one of the largest to be negotiated by an Israeli company with Mexico. The Degem teaching centres include systems for teaching electricity and electronics. All teaching aids come in mobile units, which can be moved from one industrial plant to another. Degem Systems was founded in 1967 and has specialized in sophisticated electronic teaching systems. The company expends some 15 per cent of its total turnover on research and development. Half of its employees are trained in engineering or other academic dis-ciplines. Owner-manager Yisrael Asher graduated in electronic engineering from the Technion. The company markets its products in more than 80 countries.

Kupat Holim ups prescription fees from IL1 to IL3

TEL AVIV. — Kupat Holim has raised its fees for each prescription from Li to ILS. The increase, which take effect immediately, "is aimed not at raising money for the sick fund, but to encourage patients not to pick up drugs they do not need," according to Shlomo Peretz, assistant to Prof Haim Doron, director-general of Kupat Holim.

Patients suffering from chronic diseases, who are on constant drug therapy, and social welfare cases, will continue to pay only IL1, as

TEL AVIV. - The share market advanced yesterday with gains in nearly all sectors. though price advances were tempered as profit-taking was visible in various securities. Trading turnovers slumped to less than IL46m.

A senior bank executive who specializes in securities said that a further rise in the market would require broad public participation. He suggested that Sunday's rise was brought about by an extremely small segment of investors. He told The Jerusalem Post that he did not feel the government would take steps which would have a negative effect on index-linked bonds.

He also ruled out any possibility of a deferment in the repayment of index-linked bonds that come due for redemption. Yesterday's market action, marked by lower turnovers showed that a new trend was not being es tablished and that the general public was not switching funds out of index-linked bonds and into equities he said, .

The index-linked bond market was mixed Four and 6.5 per cent bonds were lower while others were unchanged or alightly improved Turnover in bonds was slightly higher than hat achieved in the share market.

Dollar in six-yen plunge

LONDON (AP). - The U.S. dollar plummeted nearly six yen at Tokyo yesterday, and also fell back on other currency markets, as dealers expressed the conviction that it had been over-valued recently. Gold bullion prices surged.

The dollar's fall at Tokyo was its biggest fluctuation since the seven-yen rise the dollar enjoyed last November 2. The dollar closed at 216.90 yen, down from 222.775 yen

Fish prices go against current

HAIFA - Fish breeders, deciding to swim against the inflationary stream, have reduced considerably the price of their St. Peter's fish (connon). During May the fish will be retailed at IL50 per kg., including VAT, IL10 off the regular price.

Breeders' Union secretary Marco Solomon told The Jerusalem Post that they decided to push sales of the St. Peter's (called moosht in neighbourhood fish stores) because efforts to turn it into the principal produce of the fish ponds were extremely successful. Breeders have already raised amual production of the fish from 1,500 to 2,500 tons "and we expect to do better. if we can raise the demand for them too.

While in the past the St. Peter's were merely a by-product of ponds devoted mainly to the breeding of carp, breeders consider the fish a particularly good buy because of its very low (4 per cent) fat content and the fact that its fat is unsaturated, making it ideal for weight conscious consumers. A subtropical fish, the St. Peter's main drawback has been its inability to stand up to cold spells. The fish die in water below nine degrees centigrade, a common winter temperature in the Upper Galilee, where many fish ponds are located. The breeders have overcome this problem by various means, including pumping warm water through the ponds, digging un-ERNST JAPHET, chairman of the executive of Bank Leumi, this week awarded certificates to 57 bank employees who finished a 14-month intensive course at Haifa University. derground tunnels for the winter, or transferring the fish to warmer regions for the duration of the cold weather.

The breeders have also found that male fish grow faster, probably because the females keep their eggs in their mouths until they hatch. This prevents females from feeding for weeks at a time and retards their

Since males were preferred. breeders developed a quick, cheap way of keeping away female St. Peters. "By crossbreeding two different strains of the fish, we have achieved a 90 per cent male birthrate," Solomon reported.

These efforts have enabled them to prepare plentiful supplies and the month of May reduction is designed to make the St. Peter's as popular to the Israeli taste as the carp, which now costs IL41.50 per kilo.

Gush Emunim threats

ACCORDING to the latest reports from the Cabinet, Prime Minister Begin is very alive to the personal affront entailed in the pseudo-messianic posturing of Gush Emunim in Judea and Samaria. This is a welcome development in Mr. Begin's attitude.

It is much less certain, however, that the Prime Minister is equally perturbed by the very real danger posed by armed Gush Emunim vigilantes and their supporters careening around those territories as self-proclaimed Guardians of the Land. The shooting of an Arab youth near Bir Zeit college; the vandalizing of an Arab vineyard outside Kiryat Arba; and the seizure of a building in the heart of Hebron by Kiryat Arba women are cases Israel has been both fortunate and wise in conducting the 11year occupation of the West Bank and Gaza territories in a manner that elicited minimal resistance from the indigenous population, and a minimal need for resorting to armed force.

This picture can well change in the forthcoming months. It is no secret that the PLO and its operatives and supporters on the West Bank are interested in heating up the region as one of the means of embarrassing President Sadat during the course of the autonomy negotiations with the intention of leading to their collapse.

In such a situation the Military Administration will have to resort to a judicious combination of military force and more subtle pressures to keep matters from getting out of hand. It may even be that the temporary closure of the Bir Zeit college - admittedly the focal point of PLO sponsored agitation on the West Bank — may have to be prolonged until cooler tempers

The Military Administration of the areas will have a difficult enough time keeping the civil peace from breaking down. Permitting Gush Emunim vigilantes and other self-appointed redeemers of the ancient Israelite territories to roam around freely as militant defenders of those territories is a sure-fire prescription for the sort of tragedy that neither Israel nor the indigenous Arab population is interested in.

Mr. Begin and the majority of his Cabinet do not agree with the view that the presence of Jewish settlements in heavily populated Arab areas is a provocation that Israel should have dispensed with in this delicate period.

But even given the Begin government's view on those settlements, it is intolerable that their members should be permitted to meddle in the IDF's difficult task of providing security for both Jews and Arabs in those territories.

Agudat Yisrael ultimatum

THE ULTIMATUM handed down to the Agudat Yisrael Knesset faction by its Council of Tora Sages that they bring about the revocation of the liberal provisions of the abortion law within two months-or quit-the-gavernment coalition is good news.

It is an indication that significant parts of the Likud are determined not to carry out that rash promise made to the Aguda at the expense of the country's women.

The best advice that can be given to Prime Minister Begin is that he weather the Aguda bluster. The promise was made when Mr. Begin's government depended on the Aguda's four votes for its bare majority, due to the initial resistance of the Democratic

The Likud-led government now has such a majority without the Aguda votes, in view of the fact that seven of the DMC's original 15 MKs are firmly ensconced in the coalition.

The price that Mr. Begin originally agreed to pay the Aguda was always intolerable; it is now politically unnecessary. That price also included unconscionable concessions on the military conscription of women and an open conduit from the public treasury to Aguda institutions with Aguda MK Shlomo Lorincz at the valve in his role as Chairman of the Knesset Finance

Agudat Yisrael is within its rights to make whatever political demands it may deem consistent with the interests of its constituents. What should be roundly rejected is their insistence on having this minuscule constituency and its rabbinical heads seek to impose their own style of life on a vast majority that re-

The Aguda ultimatum coincides with an earlier ultimatum issued by the High Court of Justice, and acceded to by Mr. Begin, that the government take rapid action to implement the law calling for the establishment of alternative national service for young women freed from army service for religious reasons. This is sure to add fuel to the conflagration building up between the Aguda and the government coalition.

In the 29 years it ruled the country Labour usually managed to buy off the Aguda with money, when its votes were needed. This took the forms of a licence for an Agudat Ylsrael bank, or underthe-table subventions to Aguda institutions. It may be that Mr. Begin can redraw the terms of the agreement with the Aguda from political to monetary lines, no matter how distasteful the latter may seem.

Alternatively, the coalition can easily dispense with the Aguda's votes, unless the NRP with its 12 seats decides to be wagged by the Aguda tail.

In such a case, or even if the NRP spurns such a role, it may well be that by the time the two ultimata run out Mr. Begin will have decided to accept the advice of many of his Likud colleagues to hold early elections this year.

IF THE government has decided to bring in the death penalty for cases of particularly heinous terrorist murders, why can't it say so loud and clear? Why must it be coy and silly, and downright misleading, hiding behind the gown of the attorney-general and concocting belated and spurious arguments about the "impropriety" or "illegality" of previous longstanding cabinet decisions?

These questions are directed primarily, of course, at Menahem Begin — as prime minister, as the initiator of the death penalty decision, and as its most ardent and spirited

But they are directed, too, at Justice Minister Shmuel Tamir who, once again, as he has with increasing frequency in recent months, took it upon himself to explain the cabinet's decision in prime-time media inter-

Both men are lawyers, Tamir an especially experienced and able one. They ought to have known better, therefore, than to advertise the cabinet decision as the righting of some pernicious imbalance in Israel's system of checks and

The decision, said Tamir, meant an end to an ongoing, un-constitutional interference by the executive in the judicial process. The law on the statute book provides for the death penalty. Previous cabinets had issued orders barring the attorney-general and his prosecutors from demanding it. The cabinet had now restored the power to demand a death sentence to where it rightly belongs: in the discretion of the attorney-general (or his military counterpart, the judge advocategeneral).

Secretary Arye Naor (another lawyer) should surely know that that won't wash with their fellow lawyers - or, indeed, with any intelligent Tamir, indeed, betrayed the fallacy in his very next breath. "No one," he explained, "intends that the death penalty be sought in run-ofthe-mili cases of terrorist murder... Only in such heinously savage cases as that of Kozo Okamoto, the Lod Airport massacrist, or some similarly extreme instance." WHO, one might ask of Tamir, is "no The Post's Diplomatic Correspondent DAVID LANDAU asks why the government is indulging in political humbug over its decision to apply the death penalty.

large countries, but not to Israel.

sibly regained his full discretion, no longer to be limited or interfered with by the executive arm.

The answer is, of course, that the attorney-general is still limited in the exercise of his discretion, that the cabinet does still "interfere" and that there is nothing at all unconstitutional or improper in that, just as there was nothing unconstitutional in the situation that prevailed until now.

When Tamir, reflecting the sense of the cabinet majority, announced publicly that "no one intends that the death penalty be sought in run-of-the-mill cases...' he was "interfering" in the judicial process in precisely the same way as the cabinet which barred the death penalty altogether in 1967 was

'interfering.' In fact, neither of them was "interfering." The whole concept of "interfering" is out of place: the executive on both occasions was simply giving its policy instructions to is regal representative, the atterney general, who is a uniquely hybrid of ficial and not entirely an organ of the judicial arm. Inderd, last weeks cabinet decision expressly our strained itself to "terrorist orimis inhuman crueity."

One can, perhaps, concur with Begin's and Tamir's strictures against the Rabin Cabinet's decisions of 1974 and 1978 (which were never implemented) an powering itself to lift the bar on the death penalty for specific crimes which had already been committed That smacked of retroactive legislation, which is abhorrent to the rules:

(One might add here, though, note of wonderment at the vehemence of the criticism. As regards the prime minister, I cannot say for sure that he did originally contemplate imposing the death penalty — retroactively — on the Nahariya killers; I can only say that his spokesman seemed to think this was his intention. But as regards Tamir. I can say with certainty that he did contemplate it, pointing out that this would not technically be retroactive legislation, since the law was always on the statute book Subsequently — and wisely — he had second thoughts.)

BUT THERE is no legal or logical connection between the criticism of those decisions, and the criticism of the original policy decision (taken, as has been pointed out, when Hegin was in the cabinet) forbidding the attorney-general to demand the death sentence. Nor is there any grounds for the pretence that the situation is healthier, more 'proper' or more "constitutional" now for the abrogation of that 1967 policy decision. If the prime minister and his apologist, Tamir, were embarrassed by the narrowness of their majority, and by the cogency of the argumer adduced against the death penalty, they could have heeded those ministers who advised that the issue be deferred.

They need not have resorted to a misleading rhetorical artifice, pretending self-righteously that they were acting to put right some glaring illegality — and thereby inevitably weakening their credibility and the cogency of their own case.

ISRAEL'S GAZELLES

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post

Sir, - We have read with great interest, and until now with considerable patience, the warnings which appear from time to time in your columns concerning the danger that Israel will be over-run by its uncontrolled gazelle population. These warnings are issued by biologist Dan Baharav through your correspondent, Ya'acov Friedler, the latest in

On February 25, 1970, the Nature Reserves Authority carried out a count of gazelles in the Ramot Yissachar area and found 1,487 of them. It is possible that a few dozen escaped our notice, but definitely not hundreds. Thereupon, at the request of the Minister of Agriculture, the Nature Reserves Authority thinned out the gazelles and reduced their iber to between 900 and 1.000. On February 28, 1978, we counted them again and found 868 gazelles. Again, it is possible that we missed a few dozen, but not a thousand. How does Mr. Baharay explain that he counted 2,000 gazelles on Ramat Yissachar, which is only half the area in which we found 868?

Unfortunately, the danger lies in the opposite direction. The type of gazelle we have in Israel was formerly found in a large area en-compassing several Middle Eastern countries; although their numbers were limited in those countries, their wide dispersal prevented their ex-

Today, this type of gazelle has disappeared from all neighbouring countries; they survive only in North and Central Israel, and the only place where they are protected is in Ramot Yissachar, and that only because they are a protected species according to the law. Nonetheless, their number was reduced by half since 1970 because of uncontrolled hunting in the area, especially since Under such conditions, how can an intelligent person suggest the institution of legal hunting of animals whose number is being reduced in front of our very eyes? And if hun-ting is legalized, will that prevent poachers from operating? And why does Baharav ignore the results of the gazelle count, which he knows, as they were sent to him?

Baharav's conception of organized and legal hunting is based on human and ecological conditions entirely different from those which exist in Israel and he knows it is impossible

GRIPING IN ISRAEL

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post

Sir. - I listened the other night to someone vent his wrath over the current and recurrent problems of living in Israel - inadequate housing, unauthorized strikes, inflation to name a few. His anger was directed at the Government which, he felt, was corrupt and indifferent.

Complaints and criticism are commonplace, especially amongst the new immigrants. I go along with some of the griping — in truth I am great griper myself. However, when this person stated that he didn't blame the Russian, or the South African or the Iranian Jews for not coming to Israel, I took exception. First of all. I do not believe that these people are bypassing Israel because of these problems. Inflation, strikes, shortages etc., are not exand violence is an integral part of the world in general Secondly, I think the time has come to stop complaining about what the other fellow is doing wrong and take a hard look at ourselves. It is true that our government is riddled with graft and dishonesty on all levels. It is also true that we, the average citizens, are not free from sin. Mention this and you hear:

"Well — since I couldn't lick them, I joined them." Is this a solution to a perplexing problem, and if so what sort of a solution is it? The people speaking sacrificed their principles, their standards and their values because they were too lazy or too weak to maintain their integrity. Or was it that they simply wanted their slice of the pie?

In his inaugural speech President Jack Kennedy suggested to Americans not to ask what America could do for them, but rather what I suggest that our critics do not ask what this country has not done for them, but rather what they have not done for this country. We must hold firm to our own principles, out standards and our values. If we fall prey to the "If you can't we have no one to blame but ourselves and no right to complain that conditions in Israel aren't what they should be. The buck stops with each and lick 'em, join 'em" syndrome, then
